

Renasset Africa ex S.A. Fund

Fund Objective

The Fund seeks long-term capital appreciation through investment primarily in a portfolio of African Securities excluding South-African Securities. The Fund Manager uses a bottom-up approach to develop both stock and thematic views. Having an African based team gives a local perspective within a global firm that concentrates solely on Frontier and Emerging Markets. The Fund Manager's stock picking style is a combination of proprietary valuation models, target prices, stock market capitalisation, liquidity and view of management's quality.

Performance and Fund Manager Activity

In March the Renasset Africa ex S.A. Fund (Class C) gained 2.7% which was behind the Standard & Poor's All Africa ex-South Africa which gained 5.9%. The underperformance was caused in the main by our Cash holdings, the performance of some of our Financial holdings as we saw a reversal of last month's gains in Oriental Weavers and Easter Tobacco on the back of the 13.3% devaluation of the Egyptian pound. The London GDR of Commercial International Bank (which we hold) also underperformed the local Egyptian listing. In Nigeria a profit warning from Ecobank Transnational resulted in the stock falling back to early February levels.

During the month we continued with our rebalancing within Nigeria and also reduced our exposure to Egypt, whilst increasing our Kenyan exposure. We remain underweight the multinational mining stocks, cautious of their ability to ride through any further macro headwinds. During the month this underweight allocation helped performance. For the month our greatest contribution to performance came from stock selection in Nigeria and our biggest detractor from performance was our stock selection in Egypt.

Market Commentary

Globally all eyes remain on the world's two largest economies, the United States and China. The Federal Open Market Committee has followed up its 25 basis point December 2015 hike with two decisions to maintain rates. With US inflation running below 2% and GDP growth, while termed encouraging, barely above 1% things remain tough in the world's largest economy despite unemployment at 5%. Looking at China, with the Q4 2015 GDP figure coming in at below 7% (6.8%) for the first time since early 2009, we are yet to find a catalyst to ignite a rebound in the Africa story. With many African having built economies geared to serving Chinese infrastructure development the unknown effects of a rebalancing of the Chinese economy to more domestic consumptive led growth, continue to weigh on many African nations. That said these fears have resulted in very attractive valuations in a lot of the fund's geographies which, which more than account for the current macro fears. This sets the fund up for point to strong future returns.

Brent crude rose over 9% during the month and this did allay Nigeria further macro fears in Nigeria somewhat however Nigeria continues to feel the effects thereof with FX drying up in the country. With many of the economy now using the parallel Naira rate (which is above 300 NGN to the USD) inflation ticked up in February to 11.4% from 9.6% in January. The movement in the parallel Naira exchange rate has been huge with the rate double that of the official rate at one point. We do not see how the current attempts to hold with currency can succeed over the medium term but the political will at the top deems a devaluation to be unnecessary. This has resulted in low valuation multiples where the Nigerian Stock Exchange Banking 10 Index currently has a Price to Book of below 0.5x and a Price to Earnings of just over 3x, with a 15% ROE. Risks are their but the high quality names will survive and definitely prosper once things normalise.

The continued lower oil price and increased regional trade set East Africa as the bright spot on the continent. This is evidenced by FY15 results from Cooperative of Kenya. The results showed progress being made in its 'Soaring Eagle' transformation strategy resulting in a 6% drop in its Cost to Income ratio (a key efficiency metric) coupled with high teen loan growth, resulting in a 46% jump in Kenyan Shilling profits. This resulted in a 15% upwards movement in the company's share price. With many Kenyan companies showing the desire and expertise to successfully expand throughout the region, Kenya is positioned as the regions great power. A seeming coup for Uganda however was talk that Total would support the construction of an oil pipeline from Lake Albert in Uganda to Tanga in Tanzania rather than the previously talked of route via Northern Kenya to Lamu. Whilst not decided of note is that the development of oil resources is still proceeding in East Africa despite low prices. With already diversified economies the addition of oil would be a further arrow in East Africa's quiver. We have seen stability in the region's currencies over the quarter but are cognisant that further weakness could materialise.

Outlook

Continued heightened economic risks persist in the fund's regions of investment. Medium term growth is however still forecast to be comfortably above the global average in most of these countries, especially East Africa. We have used price weakness to reposition the fund in those companies with the best quality companies, and which set to benefit from this growth. The long prospects for the fund are immense but we remain aware of the current shorter term risks that persist.
